

Masters for Peer-Tutoring, Pair- Practice Cards

Pronunciation Matters is copyrighted, and it is against international copyright law to make copies of its contents without advance written permission from the University of Michigan Press. Nevertheless, because the card masters are considered resource material, permission is granted to individual teachers who purchase the book to copy pages from this section in order to make class sets of the peer-practice cards. For this purpose, the normal requirement is waived, and it is not necessary to write for permission.

Instructions

Years of experience and many trial users attest that these cards play a key part in the pronunciation practice that is crucial to real improvement. The cards can be used in a variety of ways, as explained in the "Recommended Instructional Procedures and Variations" section.

To make the cards, simply photocopy the masters onto suitable paper (card stock is best, but any heavy paper will do). Make ten copies of each master sheet and then cut the copied sheets into cards, exercising care to keep the cut cards with their pairs in the right sets. The result will be a set of ten pairs (twenty cards) for each sound contrast.
